John Adams wrote that the form of government which was best was that which produced "the greatest amount of happiness for the largest number of people." Adams believed that "all good government was republican", and that the "true idea" of a republic was "an empire of laws and not men".

The August 2012 "In Our Name" Conference is to be the first of an ongoing series of symposiums and publications on the American justice system. The "In Our Name" website and blog are premised on the belief that it is the responsibility of an informed citizenry in a democratic society to ensure that the administration of its laws is conducted by the public officials who act on their behalf in a manner consistent with due process, fundamental fairness and the rule of law.

We hope that you will attend our conferences when possible, visit our website, participate in our blog and share your own thoughts and experiences concerning our justice system.

Always remember that when an investigator investigates, a police officer arrests, a prosecutor charges or presents to a Grand Jury, a Court and Judge, tries, acquits or convicts and sentences, and a prison official incarcerates, they each and every one do so under the caption "The People against"-they do so, specifically, "In Our Name". So please take this opportunity to begin to assume the responsibility to learn how our justice system operates and participate in "restoring justice in America".

Anyone of us, at any time, can find ourselves or our loved ones confronted by the criminal justice juggernaut. We propose that you educate yourself about the system now, so that if for whatever reason you or your family or friends should find yourselves on the wrong side of that caption, you can contend with the process on a more level playing field. We think John Adams would agree.

Please attend our conferences, visit our website, www.InOurName.org and participate in the "In Our Name" blog.
